Texan stands up to out of control federal spending

Houston, TX – Are the reckless bailouts driving Texas to secede from the United States?

A third hardback novel just released “Texas Secedes” by Houston author Daniel Jason features Matthew Wolverine an affluent Texas oilman who in 2004 tells the federal government to stop spending like drunken sailors, fix Social Security and protect Texas southern border. The federal government ignores him so he prays with his family and they travel across Texas with a petition to vote on secession. By 2008, Congress and the President continue recklessly spending driving the US into a deep recession, which causes enough Texas signatures to let Texas vote on secession.

Texas needs heroes like Davy Crockett, Sam Houston, and Colonel Travis who stood up to Dictator Santa Ana when he did away with the 1824 Mexican constitution forcing Texas to secede. Will the United States continue spending itself into bankruptcy? At what point will Texas draw a line in the sand and say, “If, you spend another Trillion dollars we will divorce the United States?”

Now is the time for good men and women to take action. Buy a copy of Texas Secedes then investigate groups like tea party, border watch, limiting taxes, right to bear arms, limit government and see where you fit because it is your freedom that is daily vanishing!

Daniel Jason is available for radio and TV interviews and last minute substitutions, past interviews Chuck Wilder Show CRN Radio Network, Outdoor XL 740 AM with Aubrey Thoede, KDKA Pittsburgh, PA, WLRQ Radio Melbourne, FL, and many more.
